Words of Warning.—THE SEASON OF COLDS AND COUGHS is now approaching. The weak and delicate should therefore beware. As a preventive of those common and insidious complaints, no medicinal compound or discovery has proved so effectual as the use of a good Strengthening Plaster. Every practical physician knows this fact, and every man and woman should be aware of it. If all those who are subject to exposure, or who are naturally delicate and predisposed to pulmotary complaints, would habitually wear a proper Plaster during the Fall and Winter months, the annual death by consumption in the united States would be decreased one thousandfold. Until this is done our national acourge with continue its destructive march, is deen our national acourge with continue its destructive march, and the fairest of all ages, clauses and continue its destructive march, and the fairest of all ages, clauses and on thousandfold. Until this is would benefit. Any good Plaster will answer a good purpose, but the peculiar properties of MOREHEAD'S MAGNETIC PLASTER must recommend it as the early seed. It spilication is warm and soothing; its effects are immediate and permanent, and it imparts strength while it subdices pain. It is, therefore almost a positive antidote to Pulmonary attacks while worn and as a prompt remedy for these dangerous affections, a single box is worth all the Ealms, Balsams, Syrups, Elizirs and Pectorals which modern philauthropists eated so highly in the newspapers. Many a teat is sheel over an early grave in direct consequence of these "wonderful remedies." The truth is that in matters relating to our health we seldom use our common sense. How can a bottle, or a hundred bottle, of weetened water, with sittle laudanum and ipecac, cure a cold or stop a cough! How can it protect a weak chest and delicate lungs! How can it do any good whatever? Thousands of sad hearts are now grieving in response. It is abominable wickedness to re son, should be an hour without the MAGNETIC PLASTER.

Its cheapness is not the least of its recommendations. A single box will last the whole Winter. Price 25 cts.

T. B. PETERSON & BROTHERS, No. 306 CHESTNUT STREET. PHILADELPHIA, take pleasure in presenting to the public what they believe to be the best romance of real life ever written in America. This is the opinion of the best and most impartial editors and critics, several of whom have road the work in proof-sheets. They all say that it is one of the most thrill powerful and absorbing stories ever penned, and is no "ca " fiction, but one of equal value and interest; full of stirring incidents, and strungly-drawn scenes, intensely inter-every page, yet so beautiful in style, and so true to natuand with delight by the best-educated men of the country In proof of this, the publishers quote the following notice from one of the most candid and able Literary Reviewers in the United

Read what the editor of The Philadelphia Evening Bullet

"Since the days when Charles Brockden Brown surprised and delighted the Finladelphia public with his remarkable movels, we have had no work of action. Philadelphian in its origin and it is seenes, equal to this by Mr. Charles J. Peterson. Indeed there are certain traits of resemblance between it and the becovers of Frown; though Mr. Peterson's style is less Johnsonian his characters are more natural, and the management of his story is better suited to the popular appreciation.

"In 'The Old Stone Mandon,' he has undertaken to give the autoblescraphy of a woman—not an easy task for a man, but one is better suited to the popular appreciation.

"In: The Old Stone Mandon," he has undertaken to give the autobiography of a woman—not an easy task for a man, but one that he has succeeded in beyond any similar instance that we can recall; for though the style persists in being vigorous and mascaline, the character and feelings portrayed are thoroughly feminine. Margaret is a real woman, whose entire history, from the moment of her reception at the house of her vulgar worldly relations, through all her life of a transactionary trial, to her happy establishment as the wife of a noble-hearted man, is such as might have been described by a woman's own pen.

"It might weaken the interest with which this novel will be read, were we to give an outline of its plot. It is ingenious and original beyond any of its author's previous works. The awful character of the "Old Stone Mansion," and the scennes that occur in it, give the story that species of interest that always attaches to the supernatural. But in few stories that we are familiar with have supernatural signs been so naturally explained. The apparently inexplicable horrors of the library are made perfectly elect by the catestrophe, had the description of this cast-trophe, we may add, is given with great dramatic power. We cannot speak more fully of the story, without telling more of it than we desire, and telling it not half so well as it stold in the book, which we recommend to our resders to obtain, as one of the best of its particular class of romance." paracount case of romances.

Read what the editor of The Philadelphia Sunday Dispatch says of it:

"Mr. Peterson, lovers of good stories may properlay say, writes too little faction. His mind is practical and earnest, and his studies have allared him to those fields where the resper garners nothing but stern facts. He is better known by his historical works than by his tales and novels, and yet he has written some things in the later branch of literature that may be considered standard. 'Cruisings in the least War,' 'Kate Aylesford,' 'Valley Farm,' and 'Grase Dudley,' sum up, we believe, the aggregate of his novels. All of these have had a most successful run and they are justly admired by every person of faste, who relishes purity of style, graphic and descriptive powers, and thoughtul observation. 'Old Stone Mansion' is a story of modern life and manners, and it will take rank with the most noted novels of the day. In the perceptive facinity—in that appreciation of character which gives critical ability to a person. Mr. Peterson is singularly girted. This peculiarity gives comprehension to the estimate of motives and actions, and it is a most important element in the delineation of the lights and shades of passion. The characters in this novel are therefore drawn with strength wherever it is necessary, and with delineary in those traits where gentle imming is required. The Old Stone Mansion, in its ruins and mystery, is treated with a fascinating power of description which strangely interests and appale the reader. The plot is in all particulars carefully wrought, and the incidents are natural, while due interest in them is maintained by the talent of the author.''

Read what the editor of The North American and United States Gazette says of it:

"This is a tale of American life, with enough of social detail to pass as a novel of society, and a dash of the legendary to give it the interest of fornance. The characters are well drawn and contrasted; and the observations of the author, insinusted and not formally propounded, show a seen perception and well considered experience. The descriptions of places are graphic and naturally introduced. Of course Mr. Peterson did not undertake the work with any such purpose, but he has incidentally demonstrated that the incidents, seches, characters and events, which must form the material of a modern tale, may, by a skillful which is a surfamed as to present the spoegrame and may be referred to as an American novel, worthy of the name The plot is well constructed, the situations have a highly dramatic interest, and the lesson of life which the tale teaches, is whole some and impressive without being f. reed. We congastulate the author on a success, which, while it pleases us the more because he is a Philadelphian, owes nothing to that or any other accidents selected to us an American povel, worthy of the nam

Read what the editor of The Philadelphia Sunday Atlas say "Mr. Charles J. Federson mas written some very experience, works, and, as a romance writer, stands very high in the community of letters. The "Old Stone Mansion" is a story of most prafound interest, it is written carefully, and with an eye to effect. Startling as some of the scenes are, blending, as it does, the school of Radellife with that of Walter Scott, he never loses sight of Nature, or leaves his readers in a bewildered state as regards the distribution of his cheracters. Indeed, the work redects the highest credit on his talents as a writer, and equally so to the literature of our country. GOLD-FOIL

HAMMERED FROM POPULAR PROVERBS.

By THOORY TITCOMS.

I volume, Ilano., 350 pages. $1.

The same, in full gilt, $150.

In this book the author has taken the nuggets of pure gold from the proverbs of the people—the truths verticed by human experience—and hammered them into foil, revealing the extent of their trathfalmes and value, and adapting them to the purposes of the life of the present age. It is, in fact, a volume FOR the people, by one OF the people, the people the music very single works, a rare knowledge of human nature, a thorough apprehension of the wants of the everyday life of the world, a genuine sympathy with the struggles, doubts, and trials of the Christian its, and a faith in humanity that is alike inspiring to him and his reader. This book should and entrance and welcome into every household in the country.
